

A cognitive scientist is recruited by a secret organization that maintains AI models of terrifying scale. To interface with these systems, translators must expand their cognitive bandwidth, recruiting visual cortex to perceive patterns no human mind was built to hold. The cost is everything that makes them human. As Dr. Lena Hart's perception expands, her empathy dissolves. She can model grief with perfect precision but cannot feel it. She can analyze a child's joy but cannot share it. And when the largest model reveals what reality looks like at sufficient bandwidth, every moment of pain eternally present in spacetime geometry, she must choose between the comfortable ignorance she can never return to and a truth that might shatter her. Philosophical horror for readers of Peter Watts, Ted Chiang, and Thomas Ligotti. The monster is comprehension itself.

Echoes of the Sublime
Alex Towell

ECHOES OF THE SUBLIME

ALEX TOWELL